

Stanford University Commends Winnick Family Foundation For Support to Graduate Business School

Dr. Lawrence Wein, operations management and homeland security expert, is named The Winnick Faculty Fellow of 2009-2010 at Stanford University's Graduate School of Business. "The Winnick Family Foundation's investment in faculty excellence is vital to keeping the School at the frontiers of knowledge," said new GSB Dean Dr. Garth Saloner.

LOS ANGELES CA – September 21, 2009 – Dr. Lawrence M. Wein has been named The Winnick Faculty Fellow of 2009-2010 at Stanford University's Graduate School of Business (GSB). The fellowship is funded by an annual grant from the Winnick Family Foundation in support of teaching excellence at the School.

Said GSB Dean Dr. Garth Saloner: "The Winnick Family Foundation's investment in faculty excellence at GSB is vital to keeping us at the frontiers of knowledge and world-class teaching by originators of the latest ideas in management such as Professor Lawrence Wein."

Added Saloner in a letter to the Foundation's Executive Director: "Thank you for the Foundation's generosity and your demonstrated commitment to faculty as a key priority for GSB."

Professor Lawrence Wein, who also holds the Paul E. Holden chair in management at the School, is a recognized expert in operational logistics and homeland security. In a recent and strongly worded article in the New York Times, he forcefully argued that America immediately needs to do more to provide detection measures at vital 'nodes' such as seaports, airports and border stations.

Said Foundation founder Gary Winnick: "The Graduate School of Business at Stanford is in the top tier of the finest management schools in the world and one of the very few to have three Nobel laureates on its faculty. We are pleased to provide support to the School's new Dean, Garth Saloner, and to the world-class scholars on the faculty at GSB such as Lawrence Wein who was recently elected to the prestigious National Academy of Engineering by his peers."
